Jackie Roeder chairs the firm's Trial Department, leads the White Collar Defense & Investigations practice group, and serves on the Executive Committee. Ms. Roeder is a first-chair trial lawyer, successfully defending large corporations against commercial and tort disputes. The balance of her practice focuses on internal investigations and white-collar defense. She is experienced in representing both companies and individuals in SEC, DOJ, and other government investigations, as well as in counseling clients on compliance issues.

Ms. Roeder is an executive committee member of the board of trustees for the Legal Aid Foundation of Colorado, which supports Colorado Legal Services. She also serves on the Lawyers Council for IAALS (Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System), working to forge practical solutions to problems within the legal system, and on the board of directors of Law School...Yes We Can!, a law school pipeline program for high-achieving students from diverse backgrounds. Internally, Ms. Roeder is co-chair of the Women in Leadership Lecture Series, a program highlighting successes and challenges on the path to leadership.

Before joining DGS, Ms. Roeder practiced at O'Melveny & Myers in New York, where she focused on securities litigation, enforcement actions, white-collar criminal defense, and internal investigations.

Ms. Roeder holds degrees from the University of Michigan Law School and Princeton University. She is admitted to practice in Colorado and New York, as well as before the U.S. District Courts for the District of Colorado and Southern District of New York and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit.
